

May 21, 2013

To the FCC

Subj: 13-86 Relaxing of rules for nudity and language during Children's Prime time hours

There are plenty of channels on our cable and satellite systems that already go beyond what we want our kids or even ourselves to watch. We have to filter these out. And now you want to add the broadcast channels into this. Just because the broadcast networks are hoping that relaxing these rules so that they don't have to worry about being fined, or to increase ratings on their shows, is not acceptable. If they want to increase their ratings and profits, let them write and broadcast shows that appeal to all ages at the same time. They can broadcast shows that parents want to sit and watch with their kids. Do you ever wonder why "The Brady Bunch", "The Waltons", "The Partridge Family", and the various "Star Trek" series all get some much rerun time? It's because they were clean, and we didn't have to worry about our kids learning or seeing something we didn't want them to see.

I am an evangelical Christian.

Respectfully,

Rick Morin